

DECLARATION OF RISK

The sport of hot air ballooning is NOT without risk. Successful completion of a flight is dependent upon, among other things, favorable weather. The greatest weather risks to ballooning include: The possibility of being becalmed over unfavorable landing sites. The risk of injury from a high wind landing. The risk of loss of control due to sudden gusts or wind shear. Sudden loss of visibility due to fog or precipitation. Non-weather related risks include: Threats posed by unseen obstacles such as power lines or antennas. Equipment failure either on the ground or in the air. Field conditions, the presences of unfriendly animals or poisonous snakes or insects. These or other problems may result in serious injuries, long term disability, or even death.

Participation in ballooning activities may aggravate or complicate other conditions or ailments. Conditions which may be adversely affected by participation in ballooning include, but are not limited to: pregnancy, knee or ankle problems, back problems, recent surgery (in the last six months), heart conditions, uncontrolled epilepsy, history of fainting, psychological problems, adverse drug reactions at altitude, allergies or asthma.

ASSIGNMENT OF RESPONSIBILITY

Part of the responsibility for a safe flight lies with the passenger. It is the passenger's responsibility to understand the ground briefing and to follow the direction of the pilot throughout the flight. The prospective passenger is responsible for determining jointly with his/her physician, their fitness and the appropriateness of their participating in ballooning activities.
